More fun... less work

ALL ITS CAREFREE LIFE!

Hey skipper, all the girls love fiberglass.

Psst...who's the guy without fins?

THE FUTURE LOOKED so bright, you had to wear shades. What was going on around you wasn't too shabby, either.

The 1950s were happy days. Sure, there was the constant threat of a nuclear holocaust, with kids being taught to "duck and cover," and commie pinkos were everywhere. But so were big cars with cool things like "cruiseline ventaports."

The suburbs were sprawling with ranches and split-levels. There were motels and drive-ins, beatniks and sputniks, and a little something called rock 'n roll. The minimum wage jumped from 75 cents to a dollar, and you probably made a whopping $5,000 a year. Which was fine, because the boat of your dreams—a 15' Larson Falls Flyer with a big Johnson 35—cost only $1,700. And that was with one of those newfangled tilt-bed trailers.

C'mon dad, forget the barbecue, put away the Lawn-Boy (built by Evinrude), and turn off Leave It to Beaver. It was time to get your average American family with 3.2 kids on the water.

Boom Time, Baby

The 1950s was all about family. There were family rooms and family vacations. And now there was the family boat, which was made possible by outboard motors, fiberglass, and cars.

Yes, cars. A dealer in Clovis, New Mexico (pop. 17,000), sold 112 outboards in 1956, even though the nearest water was a reservoir 85 miles away. Chicagoans with Lake Michigan in their backyard hitched up for a 500-mile ride to Lake of the Ozarks, and in Denver the locals thought nothing of crossing the continental divide, driving 100 miles for the beauty of Grand Lake. You no longer had to live on the coast—and most of us didn't—to be a boater. You could order a new Sea King boat and outboard from a Montgomery Ward catalog, and one month later it would be delivered to your door.
